

Forming a Partnership With the Son

The demand for increased production and the steady growth of public work are calling for men. This call is being heard and answered by those who are not receiving wages equal to that offered on the public market. This to a great extent is causing a drain on the farm labor; and in too many cases it is the farmer's son that is in the current demand. Something must be done to keep this son in his place on the farm. But he is not different from other boys; he has the desire to make money, and to accumulate some of the material things of the world.

If a farmer will stop and figure what he is paying his farm help and the many times a change of help is necessary without other help to draw upon, he will find it well worth while to make his son a part in his business.

This will have a two-fold effect. First, the father will get the benefit of home grown labor, which is the very best on the market.

Second, the son will have the influence and pleasures of home life, and at the same time gratify the ambition of receiving more than just a livelihood. The comradeship between a father and son will be strengthened. The demand for increased product will be met. The son knows the larger the production on the farm, the larger will be his share, and he naturally has an interest in his father's farm that no partner other than a son can have. The father also
